may be taken, it's proof that practical results are none the less to be sought of. Apropos of navigation, the fact is not so widely known as it ought to be, that since the steamship made about great circle sailing, the Admiralty have been able to save the lives of many thousands of sailors by its expedience, by which it is rendered as easy as any other mode employed by mariners. They are sold at a low price and such is their importance that they have been purchased by the governments of the United States, France, Belgium, and Russia. Those who have a mind to exercise their inventive genius, will find an advertisement in the Times offering a prize of £1000 to the first person who, within the next twelve months, discover a really satisfactory method of making paper fit for writing and printing, of some material which is not rag. We think it not unlikely that some one will succeed in this, before the year is over. It is meanwhile worthy of notice that the importance is making for the development of the great powers of India, to produce a flax of short fibre, which may be successfully applicable to the manufacture of paper. Some aid is being given to this degree beyond what many are aware of, as the increased price of the article is threatening many popular journals, and consequently many of the leading and decidedly successful cheap printers are being ruined if the price be not lowered, either through the greater abundance of material, or reduction of the cost of labour.

In Paris, the Brant legacy of 100,000 francs for anatomy, one who shall discover the cause and cure of cholera, has inspired some theorists to compete for it, but as the cause of cholera is not known, they say that one is to be found in the development of cholera in India.

huds, while at the same time it is developed by the human organism; and that an excess of ozone in the atmosphere is equally harmful to plants and animals. Sugar, glucose, and fecula—such as in plants containing these elements, and in the human food of wheat, and potato. Seeing that nearly a hundred observatories are here in England, and on the continent, from the Mediterranean to the Arctic, are taking the observations of ozone twice a day, and are publishing the results, it is not, I think, without foundation, to suppose that there is much to be gained for discussion, we shall perhaps get to know whether this potent atmospheric principle is or is not so harmful as represented.

It is not, however, a very accurate measure for the drainage of London is still, unfortunately, in the region of desecration, and, likely to remain there. If we had but the long-talked-of open quays along the Thames, the dirt and filth of the city would be removed, and the atmosphere materially and pleasantly diminished. The suggestion has been thrown out, that if all the sewage of the metropolis were conveyed far enough to debonche the river, and then allowed to flow back to the city, and to be defuse by a process of natural country, it would be at a small expense. The product would be more than usually valuable, as marine manures are said to be highly beneficial to the growth of plants, and highly beneficial to the health of the people. While waiting for the sewage to be reduced to practice, we would call attention to the fact, that a company at Manchester has for some time been collecting the sewage guano from the sewage and noxious waste, and is selling it for manure.

In these days of gold-digging, when we still hear of monster nuggets from Ballarat, and of discoveries of the precious metal at the Cape and in the mountains of California, it is not surprising to find that the same applications of it in the industrial arts. Something so ingenious in this way has just been done at Paris by a chemist, who, taking advantage of the properties of phosphorus, has succeeded in obtaining a substance glass vessels of the required shape plunged in a hot water bath. After cooling, the glass may be removed and the phosphorus moulded in any desired shape for use; which use consists in placing them in a solution of perchloride of gold, whereupon a deposit of metallic particles immediately begins, and may be continued until the molecule is of any desired thickness. The phosphorus mould is then removed in the same way as it was formed—by melting—and the gold is removed by the same process.

Mr. Pouilly has a galvanoplastic method of treating silk, by which gilded dress or drapery is produced of unequalled magnificence. He metalises the silk by dipping it upon it a coating of copper, and last of all a coating of gold. The silk is then treated with a solution that the texture, while appearing to be metallic throughout, retains all its flexibility. The richness of effect is said to be truly marvellous; and we may say that it is a Faust of the most wonderful surpassing dexterity. One of our chroniclers tell us of.

Mr. Provencal, of Rome, puts forward a fact not without phenomena of electricity, and the following is the conductor of an electrical-machine with a thin sheet of gutta-percha, much larger sparks are obtained than if a sheet of copper were prepared in the usual way. It would appear that gutta-percha is a non-conductor, and it is to be supposed. And makers and users of steam-boilers would do well to examine into Mr. Normandy's statement, that a boiler heated by steam is put in a better condition in a boiler not heated before the water is introduced. If this be true, the many 'mysterious' explosions which are mysteries no longer.

political subjects, using every exertion to prevent distraction from that object upon which they concurred. They were all united in their determination to frustrate all their attention—the annexation of Cuba by the United States, the extension of the slave trade, the statutes do forsway, or anything else, under circumstances like these :

To the list of his resolves, the House of Commons has added the following :—

1. That the Government have not entered into partnership: which it has pronounced to be peculiarly necessary for Ireland. What is to follow ? Are we to have a bill to enact limited liability ? Nothing is more certain than that the greatest good will be done to the people, and most of those who entertain positive opinions on the subject, besides the House of Commons and the Ministers, are agreed that there ought to be no enactment of limited liability, and that some authority greater than all these that interposes its veto—some "inter alios," the multiplication of abstract resolves demands the creation of a new authority, and the Government keep on the account of the things the House of Commons has "resolved" to do,—such as the enactment of limited liability, the adoption of vote by ballot, the abolition of the House of Lords, &c., &c., &c.

Physiologists have observed a certain periodicity in the health and disease. There is a tendency to expire before dawn. The periodical crisis of Hampeston Heath appears to come for the first time in years after the year 1820. The two last occupy its approach have been before parliament in 1829-30, 1841-2, 1843-4. One of the arguments advanced by Lord St Leonards is that the year next in succession does not occur before a natural, since the present owner would have the odium and his successor the profit

As the time has gone so far, Sir Thomas Wilson might as well fall the testator's intention, and allow an end to the life-life to elapse before approaching the heath with a mummy. The next successor will have the power without the intervention of parliament, and also the personal responsibility.

What could make Lord Clanricarde call Lord Abercrombie's satisfactory explanation a "retraction"? There was nothing in the speech itself, or in the circumstances, or in the impression which is created, to suggest the epithet. The reason, therefore, must be in the man who used the word; and we are reminded by the inveterate bitterness, which seems to be independent of party and is equally independent of facts, that Lord Clanricarde, who was in a previous Liberal Ministry, is not in the present Liberal Ministry. Worse, the Postmaster-Generalship, which he might have expected to enjoy, is given, not to a stranger, but to a relative! Morals might contrast the fate of the peacocks by Clanricarde with that of the good-tempered George Grey. Sir George was in a previous Liberal Ministry, and was not in the present; he took his position good humouredly, and now he is in the they show it to you in all the limbs; if strength the name; and the agonies of Laocoon as no discernible in his foot as in his face. Thus, pure and naked nature speaks a universal language, which is understood and valued in all times and countries even where the Grecian dress, language, and manners are neither regarded nor known. It is worth observing that many of the fair sex do sometimes betray themselves by their over-decency (which is the want of all true delicacy) in this respect. But I am ashamed to combat such silly affectations; they are beneath men who have neither head or heart—they are unworthy of women who have either education or simplicity of manners—they would disgrace even waiting maids and sentinels—men-milliners.—Handbook to the Public Galleries, by Mrs. Jamieson.
